Partner's Pest Control

We have incorporated a variety of changes and new data for the final project and the client we have produced the work for. The final project developed information and documents related to the website "Partners Pest" for the client, who serves the community as a pest control expert. The documents produced include a sitemap of the website to help organize the different sections of the website, a wireframe of each webpage found within the website that we have created documents for, text documents corresponding to the wireframes that contain edits of the original webpages, and a pest database that we created ourselves for the site.
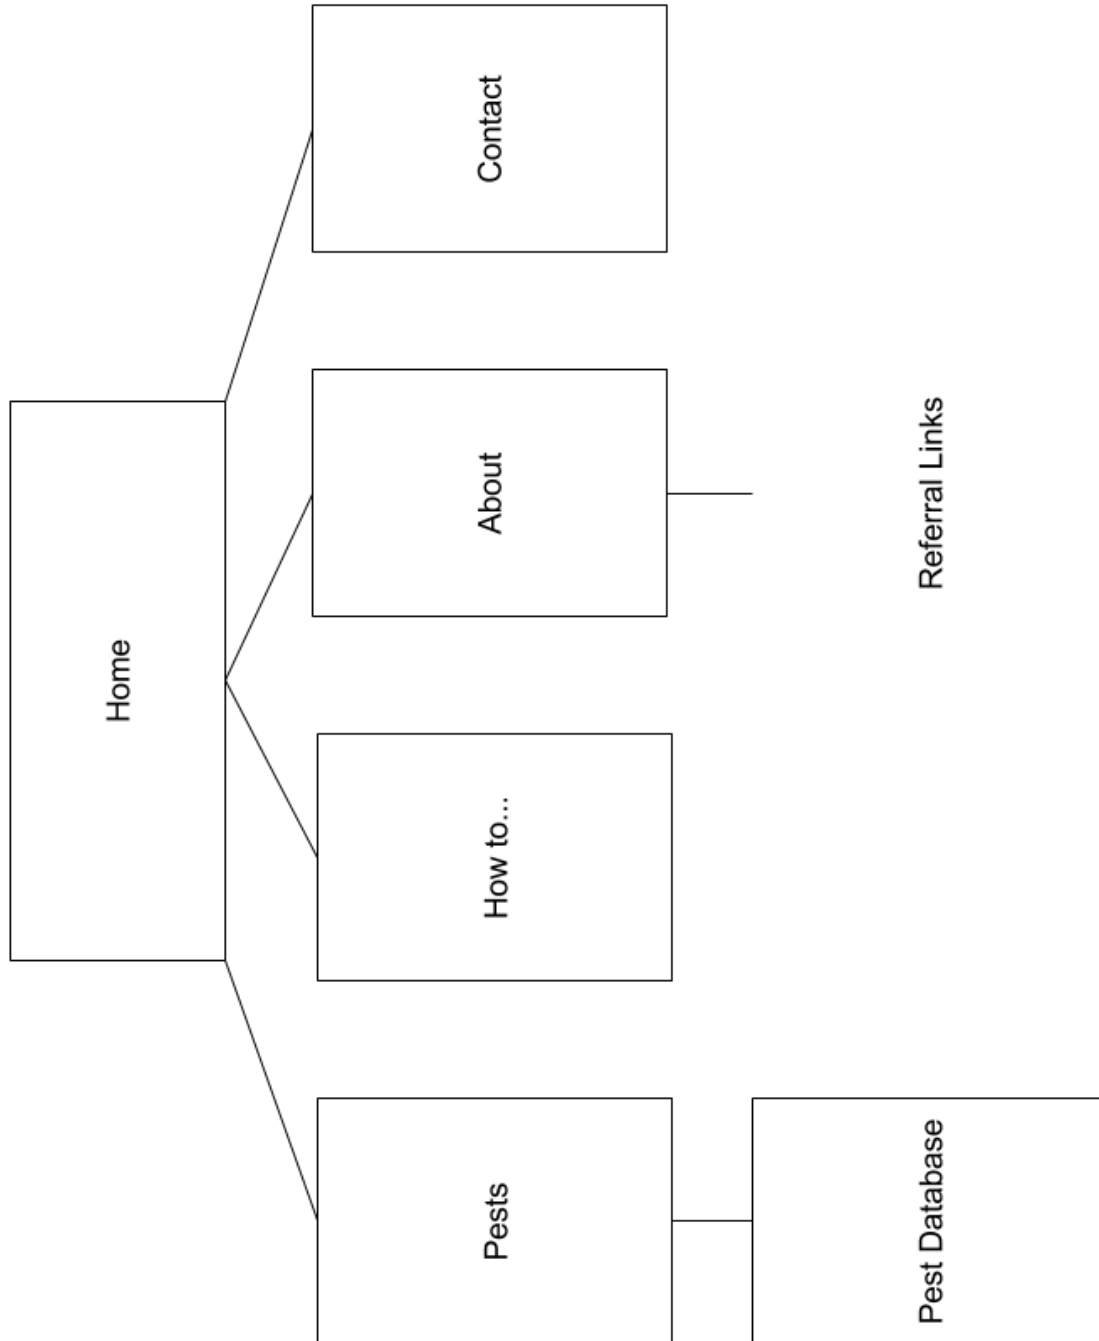

We have created the database with sections "Rodents" and "Insects" separately to help categorize information and make it easier to access or find. The "Insects" section has a variety of insect types including bees, wasps, termites, spiders, and scorpions to name a few examples. For the rodents, we have incorporated the common type of pests a person might come across. These include rats, mice, squirrels, rabbits, and skunks to name a few. While the database has the potential to include more entries, we have limited our selection as we feel the database has a fair bit of information already.

The sitemap and wireframes will help with creating the navigational system for the site. The sitemap lists the homepage as the start and navigation buttons on the homepage will direct the users to the pest database, "How to" section, "About…" section, "and "Contact us" web pages. In addition, the wireframes create the layout of each webpage and how it could appear to the user when the website has been updated.

The changes and additions to the Partners Pest website serve to ease the user's experience with the site and access information quickly. The database entries serve to help with common pests found in the United States with information that includes appearance, identifying an infestation, behavior, and problems the creature can cause. In addition, specific entries have sections for reproduction behavior, additional information, and preventative measures homeowners and business owners can take to reduce the risk of infestations. The wireframes and sitemap help with organizing the information onto the web pages within the site and the navigational system for the website as a whole.

Additionally, we recommend avoiding the use of images of spiders on the site, as this can repel potential customers with varying degrees of arachnophobia. We also recommending editing the <Title> tags in the HTML files to specify the pages, not "mysite."On each page that features the text for its corresponding webpage, notes in italics are meant to serve as guides and suggestions for you when updating the site.

A Note on Termites (Title)

The variety of termite generally encountered in Northeast Texas is the Eastern Subterranean Termite. This species' worker termites enter all homes from the soil, and produce a winged "swarmer" termite that can be seen during high humidity periods. They create little "mud shelter tubes" that protect the termites while they parade back and forth from the soil into the structure.They're often located on the exterior foundation but can appear anywhere in the home, especially around plumbing.

If you're lucky, you've only seen them outside. If not, that's when you need a Termite Specialist.

Pest Database Page

This page requires some explaining. Ideally, each entry would initially be just the name of the pest, with each one including a dropdown arrow that expands the entry and provides more information.

How To Prepare Your Home for Pest Service (Title)

Before any treatment is performed, a thorough inspection is necessary. You can make this process faster and easier by preparing your home beforehand.

Sometimes, treatment for specific pests will require different preparation. Fleas, for example, may require all items to be picked up off of any surfaces to be sprayed. As much carpet needs to be treated as possible and any toys, pet food dishes, tools, etc. may also need to be removed from the yard.

Treatment for German Cockroaches may require items to be removed from cabinets so that baits and growth regulators can be applied to areas in which the roaches hide. Your technician can make recommendations.

Most residences will need some preparation prior to a pest control treatment. We all leave things lying around that we would never want to come into contact with pesticides. Make sure that everything like pet food dishes and toys are moved to a location that will be away from the area(s) that will be treated.

If you've signed up for regular maintenance services, preparation should not be complicated. Usually, simply tidying up is all that's necessary.
